The Canadian-Australian steamship Aorangi, Captain Phillips, arrived from Vancouver and Victoria yesterday morning at eight o'clock with a large number of passengers and twenty-nine tons of freight for this city. Of the total of fifty-three passengers, twenty-two were in the steerage, most of them being the Portuguese immigrants who have been sent from Massachusetts to go to work on the plantations here. One of the cabin passengers was Governor Thurston of Fiji, who is on his way home.

The Aorangi reports the same good weather which has been experienced by all the vessels arriving here of late. She sailed for the Colonies at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Glad to Go.

The bark R. P. Rithet, Captain Drew, sailed yesterday morning for San Francisco. Her stop here was not an especially pleasant one this time on account of the difficulties with the crew. Most of them appeared in police court on one charge or another, and it was necessary for Captain Drew to get a new mate and second officer, the old mate being in the hospital as a result of his punishment by the second mate, who is in jail, also as a result of that punishment. Captain Denny sailed as mate of the Rithet.

The Children of the Sea.

"He tell-a me I break-a de burner, he break-a my face. I no want-a my face broke; I no work-a for him. I quit-a de ship. I no like-a quit-a de ship but I no like-a de man."

Thus painfully did Manuel Lopez complain Friday afternoon to Commissioner Almy, to whom he had come to tell his troubles. The Commissioner is the man to whom all the sailorfolk run with their hard luck stories, and he listens to all of them, advises some, admonishes others, sympathizes with those that need sympathy, helps those whose sorrowful tales he knows to be genuine—and when occasion arises is very stern with the delinquent children of the sea.

Manuel is a fireman on the American-Hawaiian steamship Columbia, and has been for the past eighteen months. But after all that time things went wrong with him. The steamer got a bad lot of oil at San Francisco before coming down this last time, and the burners broke with monotonous regularity.

The chief, mindful of the fact that he was going to have some trouble explaining to hard-headed agents how it was that the steamer used up so many burners, jumped on the first assistant. The first assistant, smarting under the roast he had received, passed it on to the fireman, Manuel. Now, Manuel is proud of his accomplishments as a fireman, and he objected seriously to being roasted. There was no one below him whom he could roast in turn, so he got mad and went to see Commissioner Almy. He wouldn't fire on the Columbia any more, so there, now.
